In the 12th century, the Silk Route, the golden age of the Indus Valley, was at its peak. The world's earliest known cotton industry was born in the Indus Valley, where cotton was grown and processed. Today, India is the world's largest producer of cotton, and it is also the world's largest exporter of cotton goods. The country's cotton industry is one of the most important sectors of the economy, providing employment to millions of people across the country.
